The terrified equipes stood like statutes, for had they moved an iota they would have surely have stepped off, so small was the piece on which they floated. The driver, suddenly gaining strength, stood on the top of the wood rack and leaped for the sound ice, but fell into the water. Grasping the sound floe, however he succeeded in dragging himself out. The horses, seeing their master safe, seemed suddenly possessed of strength, and leaped also from their cake, but not having any footing to start from, they also missed their mark and, after the most strenuous efforts, the heavy iron-shod sled drag ging them down, they were drowned.

Horrified almost beyond measure, Degol swooned, but, as fate would have it, was soon after found by a party that had been sent out to meet him, but had also been stopped by the crack, and had wandered south to find a nurrower opening. Almost frozen stiff, Degol was carried home where a high fever attacked him, but, with careful nursing, he is now recovering. A chill of horror comes over him when he tells his tale—the story of a winter's night, on Lake Winnebago.

THE COLORADO DESERT.-Little donbt now exists that the Colorado desert was once the bed of the sea. Careful instrumental observations have lately been made, which seem to establish the fact beyond doubt. Between the San Gorgonio Pass and the San Diego and Fort Yuma wagon road, a distance of fitty miles, the surface is far below the sea lev-On the line of the railroad there are depressions of 215 feet below the surface of San Francisco Bay, and other parts of the desert are 300 feet below the level of the Pacific beyond the Golden Gate. On the rocks and sides of the mountains, a great many signs have been discovered, such are as held to be confirmatory of this theory of former submersion, and is now accepted as a fact, by the best informed scientists. Hence it would appear that, either through the gradual exhaustion of the sources of water suply, or through some more sudden and natural convulsion, the heart of the continent, once occupied by a vast expanse of water, has been drained, within a comparatively short space of time, and changed to dry land.
